

Turning great Discord posts into a lasting library

Someone shares hard-won advice in Discord. Three days later it's buried in the scroll and nobody can find it again. This is how you and Silas! rescue it — with the author's permission, on the record — and shelve it in the community's Q&A library on Stoke.

For moderators of the Body Doubling Discord

THE 30-SECOND VERSION

How it works

Two systems, one hand-off. Silas! lives in Discord and does the asking. Stoke holds the library and the permission record.

1. You right-click a good post in Discord and choose Capture for Stoke.
2. Silas! DMs the author — as the community's resident librarian — and asks permission: yes with credit, yes anonymously, or no.
3. Their answer is recorded in Stoke, timestamped, right next to the post. Nothing publishes while permission is pending, ever.
4. Once they say yes, the capture appears in your review queue on Stoke, where you file it as an answer to an existing question or as a new one.
5. If they asked for credit, they get a personal claim link — so the post can move onto their own Stoke profile whenever they sign up, even months later.

Why the permission step matters. We are moving someone's words from a semi-private chat to a permanent, linkable library. Consent isn't a formality here — it's the whole design. A "no" is recorded and honored, and it stays a no.

BEFORE YOU START

What you need

- The Manage Messages permission in the Discord server (or the designated capture role) — that's what gates the command.
- A Stoke account that is an organizer or moderator of the Body Doubling community, so you can see the review queue.
- Nothing to install. The command is already registered on Silas!.

STEP BY STEP

Capturing a post

1

YOU, IN DISCORD

Spot something worth keeping

The test: would a member six months from now be glad they found this? Good candidates are concrete tips, a routine that works, a tool recommendation with the reason behind it, a thoughtful answer to a question that gets asked a lot. Skip the chatter, the venting, and anything personal or clearly in-the-moment.

Sean 🌟 11:17 AM

Being true to yourself is honoring yourself. When you align your actions, choices and the way you express yourself to others with your core values and a clear/honest self assessment. This way you are never compromising your integrity in order to meet other's expectations (people pleasing).

There are 3 key elements to truly being yourself. They are 1: self-awareness 2: authenticity and 3: setting boundaries

A real post in the server — a few sentences of practical, durable advice.

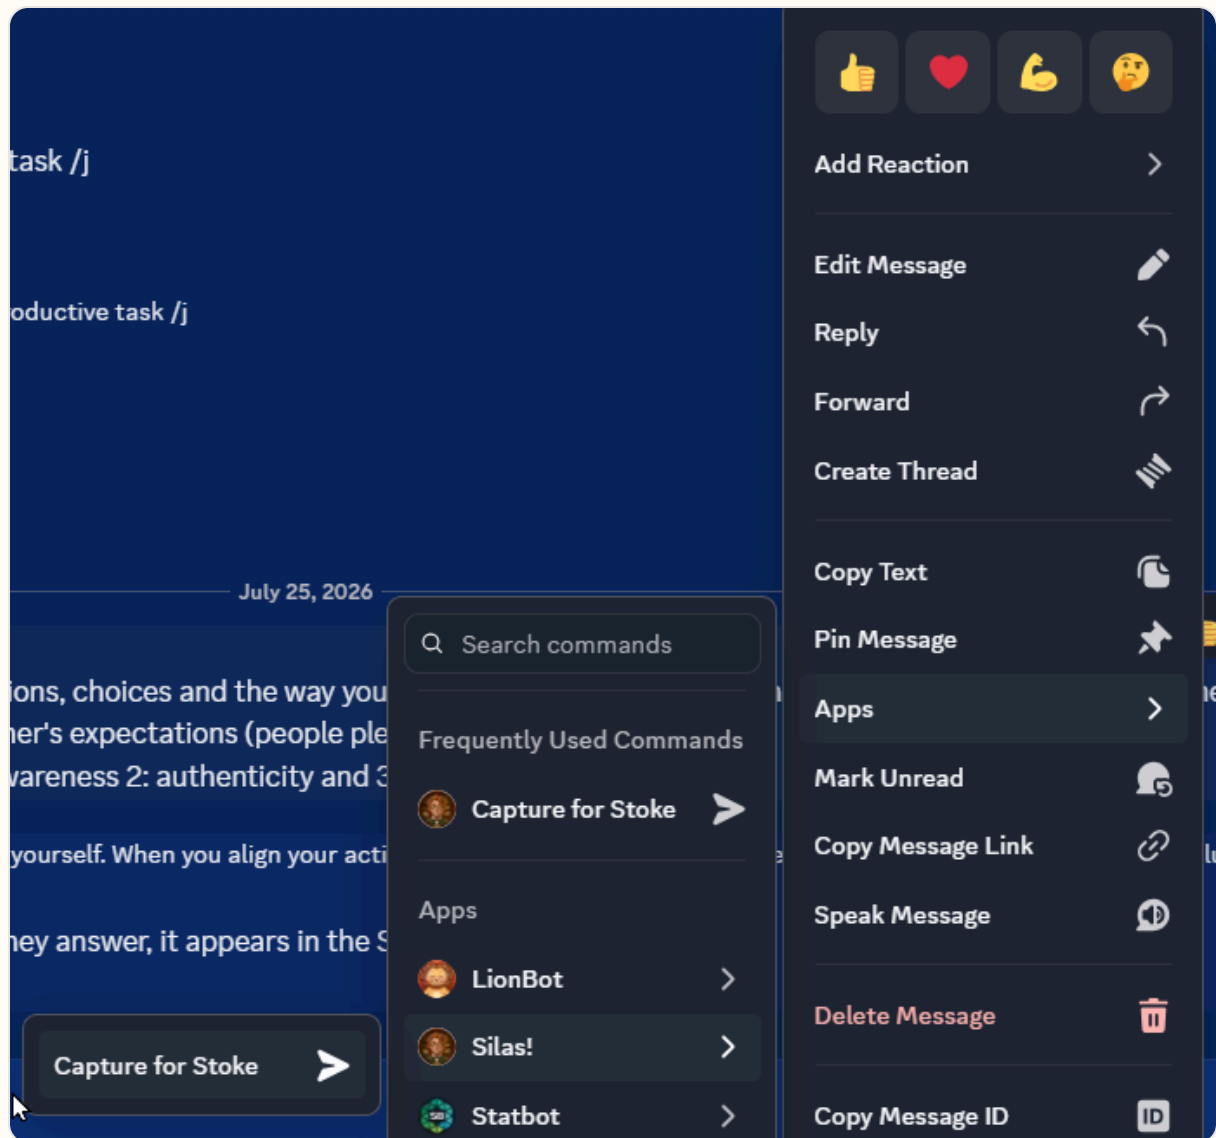

2

YOU, IN DISCORD

Right-click the message → Apps → Capture for Stoke

On desktop, right-click the message (on mobile, long-press it) and open the Apps submenu. Choose Capture for Stoke. If you don't see it, you're missing the moderator permission — that's the gate, not a bug.

Images come along automatically. If the post has photos attached, Silas! copies them into Stoke's own storage right then, because Discord's image links expire after about a day.

The Apps submenu, with  Capture for Stoke in the list.

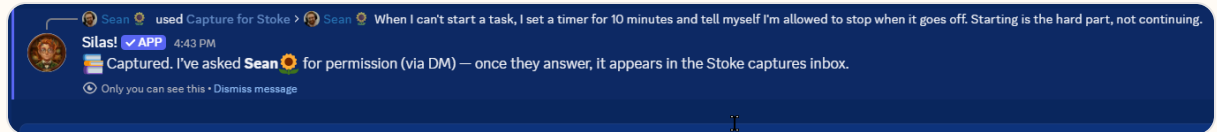

3

SILAS! CONFIRMS, PRIVATELY

You get a quiet confirmation

Silas! replies only to you — nobody else in the channel sees it. It tells you the capture landed and how the author was asked: normally by DM, or as a reply in the channel if their DMs are closed.

That's your whole job in Discord. Don't nudge the author, don't explain, don't apologize — the librarian's ask is written to be warm and pressure-free, and it does the work for you.

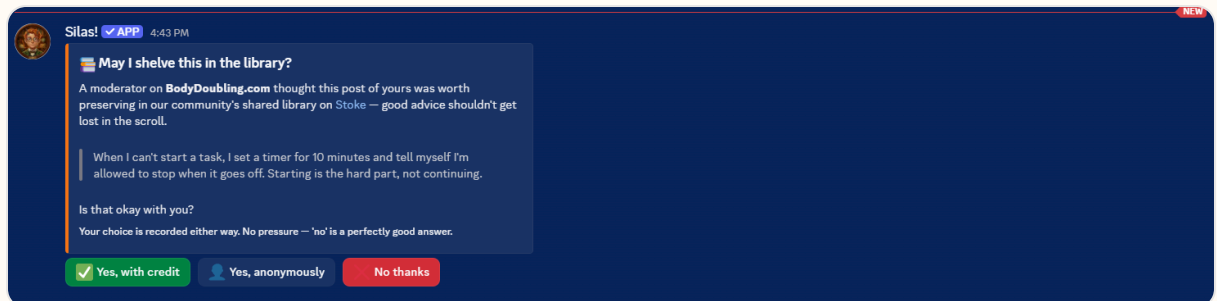

" Captured. I've asked [name] for permission (via DM) — once they answer, it appears in the Stoke captures inbox."

4

THE AUTHOR, IN THEIR DMS

Silas! asks permission

The author gets a card from their librarian: " May I shelve this in the library?" It quotes their own post back to them, mentions any images coming along, and offers three buttons. The footer says the quiet part out loud: "Your choice is recorded either way. No pressure — 'no' is a perfectly good answer."

The consent card, with  Yes, with credit ·  Yes, anonymously ·  No thanks.

Three answers, three outcomes

✓ With credit

Shelved under their name. The library entry reads "📖 Shared by [name] on Discord." They also get a private claim link so the post can become theirs on Stoke later.

👤 Anonymously

Shelved as "a community member." The advice lives on; their name never appears anywhere on Stoke.

✗ No thanks

Nothing is published. Ever. The decline is recorded — proof we asked and honored the answer. Don't re-ask; if it comes up again, ask them yourself, in person, first.

Once they click, the buttons disappear and Silas! confirms in their own words. They can't be double-asked, and only the original author can answer — even if the ask had to happen in the channel.

Silas! ✓ APP 4:43 PM

✓ Wonderful — I'll shelve it with your name on it. Thank you for sharing your wisdom. (edited)

📖 May I shelve this in the library?

A moderator on BodyDoubling.com thought this post of yours was worth preserving in our community's shared library on Stoke — good advice shouldn't get lost in the scroll.

When I can't start a task, I set a timer for 10 minutes and tell myself I'm allowed to stop when it goes off. Starting is the hard part, not continuing.

Is that okay with you?

Your choice is recorded either way. No pressure — 'no' is a perfectly good answer.

Silas! ✓ APP 4:45 PM

One more thing — want it linked to a profile of your own? If you claim it, the post becomes yours on Stoke (works even if you sign up later):
<https://stoke.community/claim/f8294c7a60a74c88b2656d8ba2ea1fe2>

Stoke Community

Stoke Community

Build reciprocal communities where every member gives and receives — skills, time, knowledge, and support.

Stoke

Build communities where everyone gives and receives.

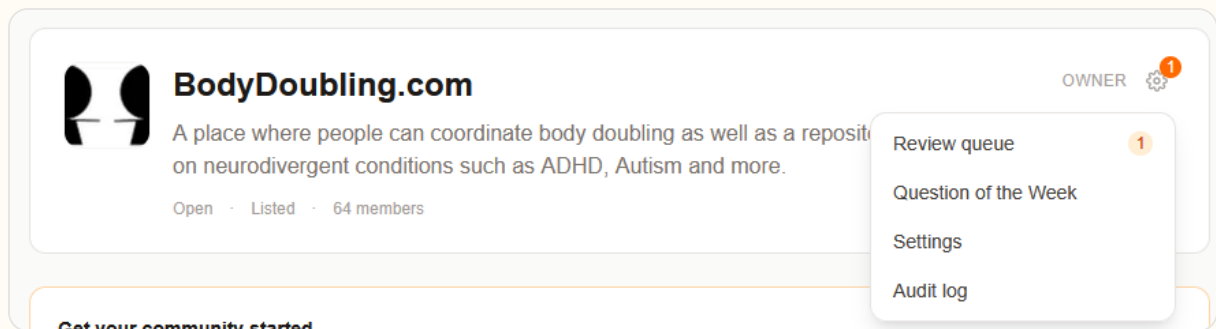

Message @Silas!

“✓ Wonderful — I'll shelve it with your name on it.” — followed by the private claim link.

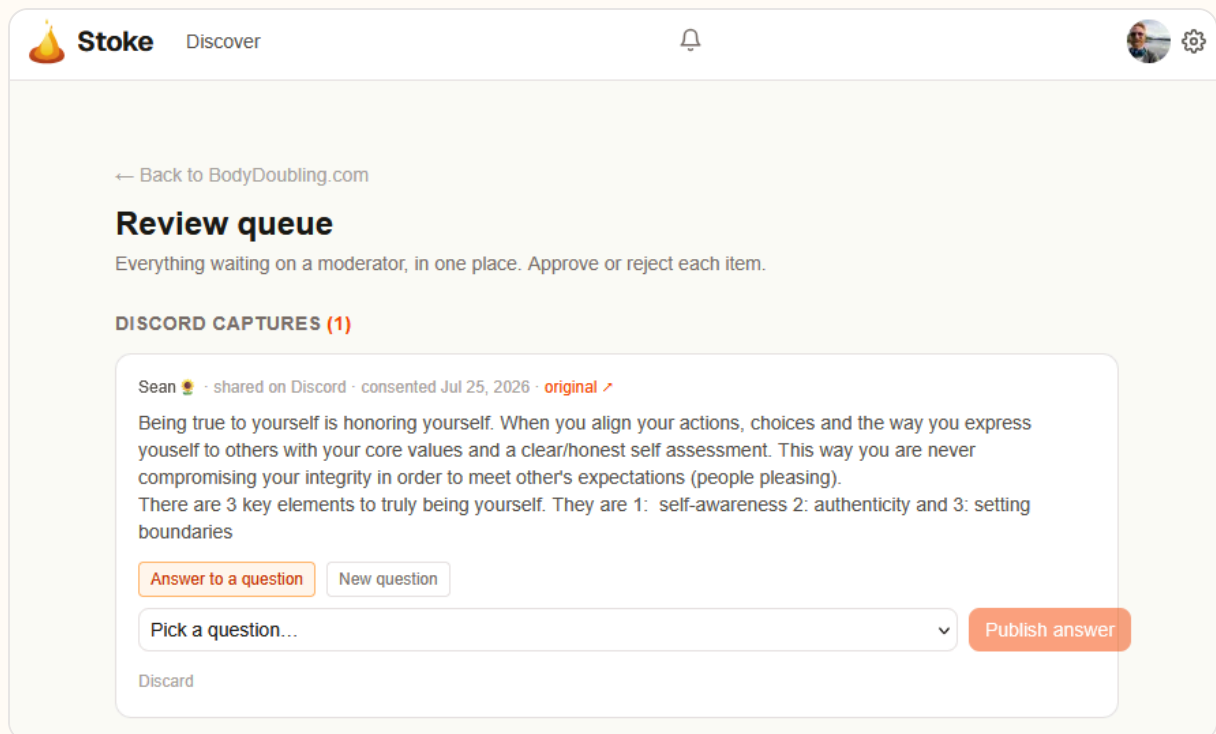

Granted captures land in your review queue

Open the Body Doubling community on Stoke and click the  gear in the header → Review queue. The number on the gear includes captures waiting to be filed, so you don't have to go looking.

Scroll to Discord captures. Each card shows who consented (or "Anonymous (by request)"), when they consented, the post text, any images, and an original  link straight back to the Discord message. Pending and declined captures never appear here — this list is consent-granted only.

The gear menu — the badge tells you something's waiting.

A capture card: who shared it, when they consented, the post text, and a link back to the original.

File it into the library

Every capture card gives you two ways to shelve it and one way to let it go:

- Answer to a question — pick an existing question from the dropdown and hit Publish answer. Use this whenever the post answers something people already ask. It's the choice that makes the library feel alive.
- New question — type a question title; the captured post becomes the first answer body. Use this when the advice is great but has no home yet. Write the title as a real question someone would search for.
- Discard — permission was given but on reflection it doesn't belong in the library. Nothing publishes, and the consent record stays.

Filed captures publish immediately — no second approval queue. You already curated by choosing to capture it.

← Back to BodyDoubling.com

Review queue

Everything waiting on a moderator, in one place. Approve or reject each item.

DISCORD CAPTURES (1)

Sean 🌟 · shared on Discord · consented Jul 25, 2026 · original ↗

Being true to yourself is honoring yourself. When you align your actions, choices and the way you express yourself to others with your core values and a clear/honest self assessment. This way you are never compromising your integrity in order to meet other's expectations (people pleasing). There are 3 key elements to truly being yourself. They are 1: self-awareness 2: authenticity and 3: setting boundaries

Answer to a question

New question

What does it mean to be true to yourself?

Publish question

Discard

Answer to a question / New question. Here it's being filed as a new question — type the title, then Publish.

How it looks once shelved

Published captures are posted by Silas! on Stoke, with an attribution line where the author's profile link would normally be: " Shared by [name] on Discord" — or "a community member" for anonymous ones. Any photos appear right below. It's searchable, linkable, and permanent.

← Back to Q&A

What helps you continue a task?

Delete

 Shared by Sean  on Discord Jul 25, 2026

When I can't start a task, I set a timer for 10 minutes and tell myself I'm allowed to stop when it goes off. Starting is the hard part, not continuing.

Edit question

Category

Uncategorized

☐ Visible to anyone with the link

Let logged-out visitors read this question. Answers stay members-only — they prompt a sign-up. Off by default; the rest of your Q&A stays private.

★ Publish as Question of the Week

The payoff: the advice in its new, findable home, credited back to whoever wrote it.

The claim link closes the loop

Credited authors get a private link like `stoke.community/claim/...`. Whenever they open it — today or next year — the post is re-attributed to their own Stoke profile: their name, their avatar, their contribution. If they don't have an account yet, the link walks them through signing up and still works afterward.

This is the gentlest possible invitation to Stoke: you already contributed something valuable here — come put your name on it. Nobody is asked to "join a platform."

Claim your post

Archived in BodyDoubling.com's library by Silas!, with your permission.

When I can't start a task, I set a timer for 10 minutes and tell myself I'm allowed to stop when it goes off. Starting is the hard part, not continuing.

Claiming links this post to your profile — your name here on Stoke replaces the "shared on Discord" credit, and it stays yours.

Claim this post

The claim page — one click and it's theirs.

WHEN THINGS GET ODD

Troubleshooting

WHAT YOU SEE	WHAT'S GOING ON
"Only moderators can capture posts for Stoke."	You don't hold the capture role or Manage Messages in that channel. Ask an admin.
"Capture isn't configured on this bot."	Silas! is missing its Stoke connection settings. This one's for Sean, not you.
" Already on my desk."	That message was captured before and is pending or already filed. Check the review queue.
Silas! asked in the channel instead of by DM	The author's DMs are closed. This is fine and safe — only they can click the buttons.
"I can't capture bot messages."	Only human posts can be shelved.
"That message has no text or image to archive."	Nothing to save — an emoji-only or link-only reaction, for instance.
Consented, but nothing in the queue	Already filed, or discarded. Check the Q&A library and the community audit log.
Author asked to be removed after saying yes	Delete the published question or answer on Stoke — that dismisses the capture too, so it won't bounce back into the queue. Then tell them it's done.

GOOD PRACTICE

The etiquette

Do: capture generously — asking is cheap and flattering. File promptly so people see their contribution land. Write question titles the way a member would search. Say thank you in the channel when someone's post gets shelved.

Don't: pressure anyone who hasn't answered, re-ask someone who declined, capture anything personal or vulnerable "because it's good advice," or edit someone's words into something they didn't say. Light cleanup at filing time is fine; rewriting their meaning is not.

Everything is on the record. Every capture, consent answer, publish, discard, and claim is logged with a timestamp in Stoke's audit log, viewable by organizers. That's there to protect members — and to protect you.

PRINT THIS BIT

Quick reference

1. Discord: right-click the post → Apps →  Capture for Stoke
2. Silas! DMs the author for permission — you do nothing, and nothing publishes yet
3. Stoke:  gear → Review queue → Discord captures
4. File it: answer to an existing question, or a new question
5. Done — it's in the library, credited, searchable, and theirs to claim